

Five Cohasset Churches To Participate In Good Friday Walk

Members of five Cohasset churches, the Unitarian, St. Anthony's, St. Stephen's, Second Congregational and the Beechwood Congregational, will take part in the "I Walk on Good Friday" marathon.

Each walker will complete a pledged 20-mile route from Abington to Hanover and back. Kay Doherty is the founder and organizer of the group, which began in 1971 with 31 people and last year included 1000 people from the South Shore area.

In 1971 a clinic sponsored by Tufts University Medical School began in Mound Bayou, Miss., and was originally funded by OEO and the Ford Foundation. When these funds were cut off in 1972, Kay Doherty started the walk on Good Friday, using the $3100 raised that year to form a farm co-op. Last year $46,200 was realized, and currently supports the original co-op, the Southwestern Alabama Farm co-op (an outgrowth of Martin Luther King's Montgomery march), the Black Belt Community Health Center and Freedom Village in Greenville, Miss., which has built on 80 acres low-income housing units and farm tracts. Each of these cooperatives was added and supported by the Good Friday group as federal funding ended.

The Black Belt Health Center is currently without a doctor, and is seeking a doctor or a nurse practitioner to care for its families. It rents acreage to tenant farmers to minimally survive. The need for all these communities is great, and as the Good Friday walks grow in number, so will the funds needed to support these cooperatives.
